

U of M Alumni Offer Proposal For Grants

BUDAPEST, Jan. 29 — In the third of a series of notes to Washington the Hungarian Government has called for diplomatic negotiations to improve relations with the United States.

Universities Must Lead

When Plato founded his Academy, the first of a long line of distinguished centres of learning, one ideal was pre-eminent in his mind — to train men to think intelligently. Now although the world has undergone many changes, and although our universities are vastly different from the Academy in ancient Athens, their essential raison d'être remains the same — to provide society with the only means of progress, intelligent leadership.

How does the university supply this leadership? At its disposal are men and materials, usually possessing higher qualifications than those in the world surrounding its walls. By bringing the minds of the young into contact with them, it is instrumental in increasing their knowledge of themselves, of society, and of the particular branch of learning which appeals to them. Thus the educational process is ethical and moral as well as practical and scientific; it is a truly liberalizing experience.

The university recognizes the importance of student-to-student relations upon the ultimate educational process. Campus life is a preview, as it were, of the life that its students are about to enter upon. But, of course, it is an ideal situation. Here we find the common meeting ground for all races, all classes, all creeds; it is part of the liberalizing experience; and it offers training in leadership.

As a leader, the university must be critical — critical of itself, of its members, and of society. It must challenge the basis of thought and action, and instruct its members in that process. It must act as eternal leaven in the bread that is the world in which we live. But its criticism must be constructive; society can see its own faults, but it has not always the power to erase or correct them.

To the masses without its walls, the university's challenge will sometimes appear radical, sometimes even reactionary. But if it is to perform its task, it must be accorded the right to express its views, and even to experiment with them.

Never, however, should any seat of learning allow itself to become or even resemble the oft-quoted "Ivory Tower" in the true sense of the term. If the university is to lead society, and train its leaders, it must always remain in close contact with that society, and walk, albeit with head in the clouds, with its feet firmly on the ground.

In a word, the university stands for leadership in society. It must make a supreme effort so to train intelligent leaders that the catastrophes of these modern times will ultimately be no more. Once the university ceases to perform that primary function, it becomes a parasite of society; when it reaches that stage, it were better to close its doors.

About Worry

There is no use saying to the worrying type "don't worry", or in giving him some tidbit to overcome his present feeling of depression. A pill to tranquilize anxiety feeling accomplishes nothing permanent.

The solution of the worry problem can be easily stated: if you can fix it, why worry? if you can't fix it, what's the use of worrying? This was put into striking words by Dr. Reinhold Niebuhr, Professor at the Union Theological Seminary: "The serenity to accept the things I cannot change; the courage to change the things I can; and the wisdom to know the difference."

The needed serenity, courage and wisdom cannot rest on will power alone, but must have a basis of facts. Into which class does a problem fall? Should it be accepted or solved?

One philosopher suggests that we consider seriously and deliberately what is the very worst thing that could possibly happen. Then, having looked this possible misfortune in the face, "give yourself sound reasons for thinking after all it would be no such terrible disaster." At worst, we can be no more badly off than Oliver Twist, wholly at a loss to think of any way of overcoming his difficulties. He, writes Dickens, "changed his little bundle over to the other shoulder and trudged on."

LETTERS TO THE DAILY

The Real Lesson of Roncarelli

To the Editor:

I don't like to appear cynical over an issue as vital to the essence of democracy as the rights of the individual in our courts of law, but I think that several points should be emphasized in connection with the Roncarelli case.

Mr. Roncarelli has to date, had to wait eleven years for his legal victory; but even now, Mr. Duplessis has recourse to the Privy Council. How long the deliberations of this august body will take is anyone's guess — but how many of us could afford even eleven years of waiting for a decision involving thousands of dollars?

RATHER HIGH FEES

The court costs in this case have been estimated at close to 50,000 dollars; and I presume this doesn't include the legal fee, that with a lawyer of Professor Scott's reputation, is not likely to be negligible. The court costs will, of course, be paid by Mr. Duplessis, but what if Roncarelli had lost?

With these facts in mind, I submit that this case is a significant example, not of the Rule of Law, but rather a demonstration of the availability of legal recourse for those who have sufficient financial backing — and consequently, beyond the reach of any but the wealthiest citizens.

More About Krupp

To the Editor:

While we are raising a song and dance about Krupp and slave labor, we forget and overlook other aspects of our world "economy" which are more important. Vogt's "Road to Survival" (1948), has the following passage describing the thoughts of Ramsey, a "Cow College" principal in a N.S. town: "Germany had organized the greatest system of slave labor (besides the Soviet Union). Few people, Ramsey knew, realized that this slavery was not yet at an end. The major part of his taxes was helping to pay for the war and its aftermath. With luck he would have thirty years more of work ahead of him. If the national debt were ever to be paid, if there were not to be repudiation or disastrous inflation, he knew there could not be much hope that his tax load would be reduced."

Seventeen weeks a year for thirty years — ten years of his life dedicated primarily to paying for the adventures of Mussolini, Hitler and the Japanese war lords. Multiply his lot by that of tens of millions of other Americans, and it added up to a greater force of slave labourers than had ever struggled under the Nazi lash in Europe."

Slave labor breeds slave labor, and Krupp breeds money which is the root of all evil. It is high time editorials and letters to the editor in a university stopped bickering about details. An educated man does not stand up on a box without noticing the fact that it contains sticks of dynamite rather than cakes of soap.

Historian Analyzes European Disunity

Eastern Europe must be free from the Russian influence, according to Polish historian Dr. Oscar Halecki, who spoke here yesterday.

Dr. Halecki said that if the countries of Eastern Europe were ever to unite, the pressures of outside influence must be removed. However, he also stressed the necessity of avoiding excessive isolationism if they hoped to attain prominence in world affairs.

In attempting to find a reason for the present disunity in that area, Professor Halecki noted that too little importance has been attached to the history of these countries. People find it difficult to forget past grievances, and a country tends to be very proud whether she has been right or wrong in the past.

At the present time these countries are bickering over their national heritage, and are more concerned with settling a petty border problem, than participating in international affairs.

Professor Halecki expressed the hope of the eventual unity of eastern European countries.

Revue Star On 'Tabloid'

Judy Tarlo, one of the female leads in "Reign or Shine", will appear on CBC-TV's "Tabloid" tonight at 7 pm.

Miss Tarlo has had several years of experience with the Red and White Revue. She played "Renfrew of the Mounted" in "My Fur Lady", and also had a major role in "Wry and Ginger". In "Reign or Shine", she will portray Pandora, Treasurer of Utopia University.

On display during the programme will be a complete collection of Red and White Revue programmes, dating back to 1924.

Classical Guitarist Visits

Classical guitarist Rey de la Torre will appear here on Tuesday night at 8 pm. in Redpath Hall under the sponsorship of SCOPE.

Born in Havana, Cuba, de la Torre went to Spain at the age of fourteen to study with Miguel Dobel, then the dean of Spanish guitarists. He made his concert debut in Barcelona while still in his teens, launching a career that has taken him through Spain, the United States, and Canada.

Admission is free, but tickets will be required. They are available, two per student card, at the Union Box Office.

Expert On Music To Speak Today

Dr. Otto Mayer-Serra, an authority on the music of Latin American countries, will speak today in Redpath Hall at 8:30 pm. His topic is "Ancient and Contemporary Mexican Music".

A native of Barcelona, Dr. Mayer-Serra for some years conducted research on early Spanish polyphony. More recently, he has engaged extensively in editorial and concert work in Mexico.

Fraternities Eschew Grid

The interfraternity council of George Washington University will not participate in intramural football next fall unless provisions are made to cover player injuries.

A rash of injuries sustained by several fraternity teams this fall prompted the decision. At the present time no insurance program, or any other provision to cover medical expenses of the injured players, is in effect.

The director of the interfraternity department at the University commented on the Council's decision only by saying "It is their privilege to do anything they want to do."

Professor DeAngelis has made attempts during the present conflict to organize some new system. But according to him, the Council has made no attempt to iron the problem out. They have contended themselves with leaving it up to the department.

Archery

The Ontario Agricultural College will play host to the Intercollegiate Invitation Meet this Saturday in Guelph. There will be six competing colleges: McGill, Western, Toronto, O.A.C., Queens and McMaster. The McGill Archery team consists of Georgia Whitman, Joan Blundell, Joanne Seale and Maureen Norwood. Coaching the Archery team is Miss Iveagh Munro.

The hockey Redmen have another chance tonight to pick up their first win of the campaign as they entertain the University of Montreal Carabins in a contest slated for the McGill Winter Stadium. Game time is 8:00 pm and admission for McGill students is free upon presentation of a students' identification card.

The Redmen deep in the intercollegiate cellar have lost all six of their intercollegiate encounters so far, and in addition have lost some six exhibition contests.

The most recent loss, and at real ego-deflator at that, was the loss suffered at the hands of the Queen's Golden Gaels at MWS on Wednesday evening. It was the second time this season that the Kingstons have defeated the local boys. The Gaels deserve to become the fifth member of the college loop next season. Although they suffered at 5-4 loss to the Carabins earlier this winter, they have proved that they can stand up to intercollegiate competition.

Coach Murray announced at practice last evening that he plans no lineup changes. The problem is that he has no material to make any changes, anyway.

ALSO NEED WIN

The Carabins, although much stronger than the Redmen, are only two points ahead of them in the league race. The only win that the Maplewood boys have been able to pick up was a 13-0 lacing of the same Redmen. Against Toronto and Laval they have had much less luck and have lost quite a few close ones to these clubs.

Bleau's squad will be all out for a win tonight to pull away from the Redmen. Coach Bleau sees no reason why the Carabins should not be able to pick up four easy wins against McGill and plans to make it No. 2 tonight. He has made sure to warn his boys that the Redmen should break loose any game now but for their sake that it had better not be tonight. Coach Bleau has been known to lay down the law quite heavily to his boy in the past and thinks nothing of benching a few players if the need arises.

On the McGill front, it goes without saying that it has been a long time since Murray has had a good night's sleep. Even the most optimistic optimist would not bet his last dollar on the Redmen.
